You've often heard me promise, Fred,

And from what treasured heads I shred

One day to tell you where

In tearless grief, my knee

Beside our dying sire, and vow'd
A parent's care for thee;
And I remember how you tried,

Till even the menials wept, To wake our father when he died,

And said, "he only slept."

I clipt from off his brow,

I've kept it sacred till to-day,

And when you look upon it, Fred,

Still think you hear the voice

That with its dying accents said

This raven braid belong'd to one

She left us-but with us she left

A fairer, tenderer flower; But like a plant of sun bereft, She wither'd from that hour.

Translated from the German for the Pennsylvania Inquirer. Distinguished Men in Spain—Gen. Leopold O'Don-nell, and the O'Donnell Family.

The O'Donnells are an old family in Ireland, to whom the former province of Tyrconnell and the present county of Donegal belonged. They lost their possessions from continual hostilities with the O'Neals, but upon the destruction of their enemies, under Queen Elizabeth, they received them back again. The brother of the gallant Hugh Roe O'Donnell, Rory or Roderick O'D., was created Baron of Donegal and Count of Tyrconnell by James II. Upon the expulsion of James II. from the English throne, and his attempt to defend Ireland, the O'Donnels rallied under the standard of the Stuarts, and after the disastrous battle of the Boyne, they were, in consequence, obliged to leave the country. A portion of them, under the title of Counts of Tyrconnell, settled in Austria, where they attained to high posts of State. Charles, Count O'Donnell, of Tyrconnell, entered the imperial service, and at the battle of Piacenza obtained the grade of general. In 1756 he fought in Bohemia, and, after the battle of Labosiz, he was made lieutenant field-marshal, and in the battle of Kollin he commanded the cavalry, and was promoted to the post of general. After the wounding of Daun at Torgau, he undertook the commandin-chief, but only to reconduct the army to Bohemia. He was less fortunate in Silesia, where he was defeated in 1761, at Reichenbach, and compelled to surrender Schweidnitz. In 1764 he commanded in the Netherlands, and in 1768 was appointed governor of Transylvania. He died at Vienna in 1770. Leopold O'Donnell, the present Minister of War, the second son of the Count of Abispal, after 1833 fought against Don Carlos, and obtained the rank of general of division. As a partisan of the Queen Regent, Maria Christina, he rendered her great services in 1840 upon the surrender of the regency at Valeucia. He lived for a short time afterwards in France, then went to Bilbao and attempted a rising in October, 1841, in favor of the ex-regent at Pampeluna, which, however, his cousin frustrated. He fled to France, but returned to Spain in 1843 to help to

The present head of the family of O'Donnells. in Ireland, is Sir Richard Anneslev O'Donnell, baronet of Newporthouse, who inherited the title from his brother. Francis, Count O'Donnell, was Austrian Minister of Finance in 1800, but died in the following year. Count O'Donnell, of Tyrconnell, Austrian lieutenant field Marshall, married Christina, daughter of the Messrs Legare and Dunovant having been related in Prince of Ligne, and died December 1, 1843.
